The Data Controller, Privacy Board, and the Information Commissioner for the City of St. John's, Newfoundland and Labrador, have commenced an investigation into a complaint against the City. The complaint arises from the use of a survey that drew on personal information gathered in a 2012 community engagement survey. The 2012 “My Street 2.0” survey was approved by the City’s elected officials, neighbourhood associations, community groups, and one-hundred and sixty-seven community members. While the survey was not open to the public, it involved a telephone call and online questionnaire. Residents’ responses to the survey were confidential and did not include personal information such as name, email address, or telephone number. Information gathered as part of the survey was aggregated in St. John’s. The complainant accessed an online database with their computer and entered the survey information into a spreadsheet that was used to produce reports on issues affecting their community. The complainant submitted complaints through various channels about the access and use of this information. The data contained in this report was created for specific purposes and the access and use of this data is limited to those with a legitimate interest in the information. However, the complainant believes the City of St. John’s used this data for purposes other than those intended. The City of St. John’s data controller has notified individuals that their information was accessed by the complainant through an online database and that they may request access to the database through the City. The complainant wants the City of St. John’s to verify that no individual’s data is stored anywhere else besides the database that is accessible online. The complainant wants the City of St. John’s to provide a full refund of any fees paid for this database and the complainant to be reimbursed for any other costs that arise from this investigation
