Shipped is a local multiplayer action sailing game with a focus on simplicity. It makes use of the four cardinal directions of a camera to allow players to view what the other player is doing. Shipped is a game for local multiplayer that is all about the challenge. It was created and playtested in the Vive Focus. Gameplay Introduction: You're a ship commander. Guide your ship through dangerous waters to get to safety. Avoid hazards such as pirates, icebergs and mines. Grab crates to get ammunition or shoot air with your empty cannons to push enemies or deflect incoming fire. Take cover behind your ship. Grab crates to power up your cannons or shoot air to push enemies. Balance is everything. The map size might be a little small, but it will expand as the gameplay progresses. The ship design is heavily inspired by the movie 'Gravity' and its concept of a danger of space travel. The character designs are based on the comic book of the 'Flintstones' show. Ports: In the near future, space travel is starting to become a reality. Humans embark on journeys through space to find new resources and new lands to colonize. A short time ago it was all about the stars, but with so many people going into space, there's more danger than ever. A group of humans take refuge on the ship 'Shipped' when a freak storm forces the ship to crash in ice. They embark on a desperate journey to the nearest port to escape the frozen wasteland. The reason they're going into space in the first place is to mine for valuable resources, but the meteor shower that shattered their ship interfered with their ship's navigation system and the crew is lost. It's up to the player to help them survive. Players can connect a second Vive, HMDs and controllers to the system. It supports SteamVR tracking. What's next for Shipped? What's new:

Alchemist of War (a.k.a. Hydragard) is a video game that was released in 1998 for the Sega Saturn by Expansive Software. It is a strategy game that has additional gameplay elements, such as a versus mode. It is also the first title by Expansive (started as Black Hole Studios) after they released their first game. The game is noted for being a sidescroller influenced by games such as Fire Temple. Gameplay Single player/Adventure Mode In single player the game plays out in an art deco house with multiple floors. The players starts off each mission in an area called the library, within the ground floor. It contains four rooms; the inventory room, a workroom, bathroom, and the office room. Within the inventory room the player has access to a dinghy, which can be used to travel across the ocean, as well as a collection of items; XP, money, herbs, potions, and ores. In order to use these items the player must open chests in the rooms that surround the library. This mechanic occurs in most games with a library card system. A quick count of the number of cards in the player's inventory presents the amount of time the player has until the player is forced to take their turn. During each mission the player is given multiple objectives, such as collect 20 ores, find 2999 herbs, steal 7 gold, and defeat 3 monsters, etc. The player has up to 9 hours to complete each mission. There is also a time limit that the player must finish the game within each mission. On the beach of each mission the player receives the location of a creature they have to capture and bring to a laboratory. The creature has to be captured, placed in the capsule by the player, and transported to the laboratory. The laboratory is on the top floor of the building. To capture and place the creature in the capsule the player must navigate around their opponents; this is done by activating the capsule. After capturing the creature, the player must transport the capsule to the laboratory. When at the laboratory the player uses the capsule to take the creature to a growth chamber or drops it off a dais. Within the growth chamber there are several shelves containing several herb types. A yellow pill appears when the players puts the capsule on the dais and the capsule carries the herb over to one of the shelves. The player then can activate a button on the monitor to place the herb onto the shelf.
