Ask HN: Can I sell my domain and get (50%-100%) of the proceeds? - evan_ Assuming I want to sell my.us domain name. Can I ask for 50%-100% of the funds or am I just being greedy? ===== gms77 I think you're going to get some really good and some really bad advice here. So, I guess you could start with "Can I ask for 50%-100% of the funds or am I just being greedy?" :o) I think it's going to depend on the price you're asking for it. I wouldn't recommend asking for 100% because I don't think there's much of a chance the buyer is going to pay that much. The better course is for you to determine what the market valuation of the domain is, and then see if you can get a higher offer from someone else. If no one else makes a reasonable offer (maybe $10k) then you can ask for more. But I think the best answer is this: your domain and the domain you're trying to sell to each come with the same sort of legal responsibilities. In other words, it's very unlikely that you could sell your domain and then use the sale to try to buy another domain for yourself. In fact, the law would almost certainly prohibit you from doing that. So, I'd say you're trying to sell a piece of intellectual property and you're trying to go against the rights of the current owner. As a result, the only way you can make a profit off this situation is by going and trying to sell the domain to someone else. If you were able to sell for what is probably less than 5% of the value that the domain name has in the online marketplace (you can figure that out yourself by checking who's buying it - Google it), then you're probably going to make something close to what you're asking in the selling price. Good luck. ----- mx I'm pretty sure there would be a contract clause that the buyer has to pay you the remaining amount. ----- mtmail It depends on the domain name (aka TLD). E.g. Us is big
