I guess this is one of the most ridiculous articles I have ever read, believe it or not. Jonesilynn This makes me a little angry. I have personally put myself in situations where I've had to defend my religion to people who had serious bad faith reasons for asking. I went to some middle schools, which had a completely dysfunctional anti-Christian environment, and one day one of my friends told me how the kids just would not shut up about their religion, and how it made them so uncomfortable. Of course I had to jump in and defend my religion, and I did so in a very academic and/or nerdy way because I thought it would have been less confrontational if I had done it in a more casual fashion (I used to want to go and talk to some of the kids because I was very curious about how they viewed us, but I never got up the nerve, and I usually avoided the kids at school until much later on). When I was in high school I had a friend who was full of stereotypes about Muslims (at that time, he was very negative about Islam, but I never really noticed it other than him seeming to constantly want to discuss Islam with me). We were in a Catholic school (my family was very conservative and I was still a pagan) when he informed me that one of the kids in our school was a Muslim. My immediate response was: "Oh my god, do you think he's going to bomb us now?" While he didn't tell me that he was joking (which was easily discernable if he had), the point is that he was extremely steeped in stereotypes of Islam and Muslims, and not just by talking about them to me in such a derisive manner. While I should not be so quick to jump to those conclusions about this actor, there have been plenty of people who
