It was an expensive, expensive project, but one featuring a few very recognizable names: Diane Kruger, Kate Winslet, Jason Schwartzman, Tobey Maguire, Johnny Depp. It was a big splash, marking a new kind of street art for DiCaprio, one that would come to be known as "The Beekeeper." The shoot was a huge success, but also a bit of a mystery -- how did he pull it all off? How did he get access to that much iconic talent? DiCaprio has been open and forthcoming about his artistic endeavors in interviews over the years, but until now, that mystery has been a part of his public persona. According to the new book The Dive-Bomber Diaries, DiCaprio's lieutenant, actor Martin Sheen, gives a fascinating answer. According to Sheen's own book, DiCaprio enlisted the help of one of the most well-known photographers in the world, Rankin, who shot for Rolling Stone, Time and People. As Sheen explains, DiCaprio was in talks with the photographer about doing work for Rolling Stone and they agreed on a rate of $80,000 per image. The Beekeeper shoot is about "human relations, and a lot of the stuff that Leonardo gets political about now," Sheen said. "It was a mistake for us to bring somebody to this island who's the manager of this reservoir. We thought we were going to be interviewed by a diver, but he came with the photographer." It's a revealing exchange, and paints a unique picture of DiCaprio and his circle. He wanted to honor the reservoir, but he needed someone who could actually work underwater. So he reached out to one of the world's most prolific underwater photographers, and paid him a lot of money to make a movie. It's a world rarely seen, and we owe DiCaprio a huge debt for bringing it into our lives. More from The Dive-Bomber Diaries: Q: Saving and loading image from memory on Windows Phone
