What is the difference between constante and constante? I have read in these 2 various sources, that there is a difference between the two. For example, this is from a Fonctionnalite document: constante étendue constante fréquence It seems that constante is the base, and constante fréquence is the derived constant. But this is not reflected in the english translation of the same document: wattage per second ampere per second Anyway, what is the difference between constante and constante? A: In Spanish we don't use monotonous terms to define what are not monotonous terms, e.g. we don't talk about "huero" (boiled) or "harina" (flour). So, using the same logic, we can safely say that there's no difference. Still, it's worth noting that "constante" is a monotonous term, a pejorative one, and "periódico" is non-monotonous. That is, if you were to speak about a dynamic phenomenon, you'd say "está cambiando de intensidad..." or some such. If you were to talk about a regular, rather than a dynamic phenomenon, you'd say "sufre períodos estacionarios...". So, constante fréquence would mean: "...periódicamente con frecuencia..." A: It's kind of old-fashioned to use "constante" to refer to things that are dynamic. In your example, "constante" refers to a trait that an entity can have 6d1f23a050
