Dentists and hygienists are the first line of defense in the battle against diseases like caries and gum disease. In the late 19th century, dentists started using a product called flouride. In 1916, fluoroide was combined with an acid to make a fluoroide-acid, called DF, and used by dentists and hygienists throughout the country. The American Dental Association recommends a child has their first dental checkup 6 months after their first tooth erupts or by the time they turn 1 whichever comes first. An early pattern of dental checkups can help ensure your child's teeth are developing correctly and prevent dental problems later in life. At Sprout Pediatric Dentistry & Orthodontics, you'll find a team of experienced dental professionals committed to taking care of your child's teeth and gums every step of the way. The requirements for the Professional Development Internship are as follows:

- Applicants must have completed their sophomore year of dental school;

Dentists offer the general public many services and technologies to treat the teeth and gums. Among the most common treatments are fillings and tooth extractions. As you prepare to see your dentist, you may have questions such as whether there is anything you can do to prepare the area for treatment, and what will happen during your visit. The following is a brief overview of the most common treatments as well as a list of questions to ask your dentist. Battling tooth decay and cavities isn't the only thing your dentist does. One of the most important skills a dentist has is providing children with a healthy smile that will last a lifetime. While parents can get children's teeth cleaned by a dental assistant, it is often more convenient to have a dentist remove tooth decay and provide other routine services for children. Your dentist will also assess a child's oral health and determine which services are needed to maintain a healthy oral environment in which children's teeth develop and grow. 5ec8ef588b
