great documentation! so, i did the export again and got the pdf file. now, next step is to send the.pdf file to a recipient with a subject line, so that he can read the contents of the pdf file. i don't know if i can send an email to the recipient, will the email be recognized as an attachment of the pdf document? thanks, sagar

a: an email cannot be sent with an attachment. you can only attach files that the reader has in their email client. depending on your settings and what version of lotus notes you have, you can either just attach the file to the email message you send, or just save it to a file that is shown on the message. to view the file saved on the message, right click on the message and select "open attachments": note: in some versions (and i think in a lot of versions) you may have to use the "open" button, and not the shortcut. in the case you want to send a message with a file attachment, you must do two things: save the file to a server. this is what you have been doing with the "export to" functions. attach the file to an email. this is what you are failing to do. you must use a library that will allow you to save your file to a server. but before you do this, you must save the file you are currently working on to the server. then you can stop your normal process. the tool you are using (simplified) will attach the file to the e-mail at this point. then you can send the e-mail and it will come out with a message showing you the path to the attachment. this is what you would want to do in your case: export to a file on your server using the "$work" variable that you used before. then attach this file to an email. you can save the file to any server you want: the server where the recipient e-mail is going to be coming from, your own personal server, or whatever. remember to first save the file to the server before you attach it to the e-mail. there is also a function in lotus notes to do the attachment for you: '$conversation&id'#names&id or, if it is a new mail message that you just created, then just open this function in the mail tab. in the dialog that opens up you can just put in the file path and you will get a message saying it was successfully attached.
