Treatment of severe tuberous sclerosis-associated renal angiomyolipoma with laparoscopic partial nephrectomy. Tuberous sclerosis is an autosomal dominant disorder that is commonly associated with multiple tumor lesions, angiomyolipomas being the most common. Although these lesions can become progressive and ulcerative, they are usually solitary. We report 2 cases of tuberous sclerosis complicated by multiple angiomyolipomas of the kidney, with one of the lesions being associated with a grade V arteriovenous malformation. The first patient was treated by embolization of the malformation followed by laparoscopic partial nephrectomy and the second patient by laparoscopic partial nephrectomy alone. Both procedures were successful, with a minimal morbidity. Because of the high complexity of the lesions in these patients, we advise laparoscopic treatment of all symptomatic angiomyolipomas, even those that are larger and associated with renal artery stenosis, prior to their progressive size and appearance. In the case of a solitary angiomyolipoma
